

October 2014, with a light breeze blowing and dawn breaking across the hills, a herd of bison took the first steps on their return to the Cherokee Nation. May 9, 2016, the bison became the first national mammal of the United States . Elevating it to the giddy heights of symbolism currently occupied by the bald eagle. Little more than 100 years since it was virtually exterminated in America in a manic bid to demolish Native American resistance, the bison now has establishment status.
